Northern Writers’ Awards 2022: Publication, mentoring and cash awards to support outstanding unpublished works from the North of England

Writers across the North of England will be polishing their draft manuscripts as the cold winter nights mean one thing: it’s time to enter the Northern Writers’ Awards.

People living in the North – whether they have been published before or are completely new – are invited to submit their unpublished work-in-progress to the Northern Writers’ Awards 2022, for the chance to win a share of £40,000 in publication and professional development opportunities.

New opportunities for 2022 include a short story award sponsored by previous winner Benjamin Myers, a development opportunity for emerging poets in partnership with Out-Spoken Press, and seminars given by The Soho Agency. All winners will have the chance to be part of a new Northern Writers’ Awards Talent Network to receive a package of money-can’t-buy opportunities.

The Northern Writers’ Awards were founded in 2000 and exist to recognise talent and support new work towards publication or broadcast. They are produced by New Writing North with support from Northumbria University and Arts Council England and a range of partners.

Now in their 23rd year, the awards are the largest writing development programme of their kind in England and have a reputation for identifying some of the country’s best unpublished writing. The 2022 winners will join an impressive list of 360 writers who have been previously supported through the programme, many of whom have gone on to critical acclaim.

In 2021, published books which previously received Northern Writers’ Awards support as work-in-progress included:

- The Unbelievable Biscuit Factory by James Harris (Hachette Children’s)
- Diamond Hill by Kit Fan (Dialogue)
- Castles from Cobwebs by J.A. Mensah (Saraband)
- Approval by John D Rutter (Saraband)
- The River Within by Karen Powell (Europa)
- Much With Body by Polly Atkin (Seren)

In May 2022, Hachette Children’s Group will publish the middle-grade fantasy novel, Zeina Starborn and the Sky Whale, by Hannah Durkan, which won the Hachette Children’s Novel Award in 2020.

Other previous winners include Yvonne Battle-Felton, whose NWA-winning book Remembered was longlisted for the Women’s Prize; bestselling crime writer Mari Hannah, who found her literary agent through the awards; and poet Andrew McMillan whose debut collection, physical, supported by the awards, became the first poetry collection to win the Guardian First Book Award.

2013 award winner Benjamin Myers has gone on to critical acclaim since winning a Northern Writers’ Award for his novel Beastings; recent titles include The Offing, Male Tears and The Gallows Pole, which is currently being filmed by Shane Meadows for a BBC TV series. Now he is supporting other writers with the introduction of a new award, The Finchale Award for Short Fiction.

The Northern Writers’ Awards offer a wide range of support and opportunities for writers at all stages of their careers, including publication, mentoring, manuscript assessment, writing placements, retreats and cash awards to buy time to write.

The Northern Writers’ Awards are produced by New Writing North with support from Northumbria University and Arts Council England. The full suite of awards is made possible by a range of vital partnerships with Arvon, Bonafide Films, Channel 4, Hachette Children’s Group, Lime Pictures, The Literary Consultancy, Madeleine Millburn Agency, Newcastle University, The North Literary Agency, Oneworld Publications, Out-Spoken Press, The Society of Authors, The Soho Agency, University of York, as well as generous donations from individual donors.

Claire Malcolm, Chief Executive of New Writing North, said: "As our main platform for identifying the writers and works that we’ll support towards publication and broadcast over the years that follow, the Northern Writers’ Awards are an incredibly special part of our programme, so we’re thrilled to open the 2022 Awards and can’t wait to read the work that comes in. If you’re a writer at any stage of your career in the North, we’d love to hear from you. As always, we are grateful that our awards partners and sponsors are as passionate as we are about discovering and supporting new writing talent from the North of England.

It is a great pleasure to watch the positive impact our awards and support can have on a writer’s career, so it means a lot that with the new Finchale Award for Short..."
Fiction our 2013 winner Benjamin Myers is now in a position to pass on that gift to other emerging writers.”

Professor Katy Shaw, Professor of Contemporary Writings and Director of Cultural Partnerships at Northumbria University, said: “The Northern Writers’ Awards are a landmark suite of regional writing awards that have a distinguished record of identifying the next generation of new Northern talent for the wider UK creative industries. The Northern Writers’ Awards are the jewel in the crowd of the Northern literary scene and Northumbria University is proud to be their long-term sponsor, supporting their aim to amplify talent from the North, for the world.”

Of launching the new Finchale Award for Short Fiction, Benjamin Myers said: “Winning a Northern Writers’ Award was the first crucial step in my writing career. I always vowed that if I were in a position to give back the £5000 prize money via an annual competition, I would, and fortunately now with one of my novels being adapted for the screen, I can. The prize is named after Finchale Priory, once a medieval place of retreat for the monks of Durham cathedral, and a place that’s special to me. I’m excited to read the entries, and encourage writers of any background or ability to enter. I firmly believe that here in the North we don’t wait for things to happen – we make them happen.”

Hilary Murray Hill, Chief Executive of Hachette Children’s Group, said: “We are incredibly proud to work alongside New Writing North, recognising and nurturing Northern writers for children and young people. Hachette UK’s Manchester, Sheffield and Edinburgh offices are all now open for business and soon we’ll be sharing office space with New Writing North in our new Newcastle premises. These are all tangible signs of our commitment to finding, developing and publishing creative writing from the North of England and Scotland. Collaboration and innovation are at the heart of our relationship with NWN and we very much look forward to working with them on the 2022 Awards.”

Professor Helen Smith, Head of Department, English and Related Literature, University of York, said: “We’re delighted to support the NorthBound Book Award again this year, celebrating and promoting the vibrancy of writing and publishing in and about the North of England. Our regional literary heritage is a constant source of inspiration to the University and our students, and we’re proud to be part of an award bringing the best new Northern writing to audiences across the world.”

JUDGES’ COMMENTS

Judges for this year’s awards include the writers Tahmima Anam and Doug.
NEW WRITING NORTH

Johnstone, who will judge fiction and narrative non-fiction categories, Helen Mort and Anthony Anaxagorou, who will judge poetry categories, and Katy Massey, who will judge the Sid Chaplin Award. Children’s author Michael Mann will be one of the judges of the Hachette Children’s Novel Award.

Anthony Anaxagorou said: “It’s become more apparent in recent years how crucial a broad conception of ethical early-career support is to a vibrant poetry sector, not just a rush to publication but the importance of nurturing emerging voices and ensuring we provide resources to develop the work and equip poets with the skills to navigate and advocate for themselves in the industry.”

Doug Johnstone said: “I’m absolutely thrilled to be a judge for this year’s Northern Writers’ Awards. They are a terrific boost to the writing community of the North, and have helped so many writers build their craft and careers over the years. I’m looking forward to reading diverse and unique stories, work that can only have been written by that particular author. Having worked with New Writing North before, I know the standard will be extremely high.”

Michael Mann said: “This is an incredible opportunity to be part of – it’s so nice to be able to give something back. These competitions make a real difference to aspiring authors (as they did to me) and it’s great to be supporting the North, as I grew up there and know it to be a source of real creativity and talent.”

Katy Massey said: “The Northern Writers’ Awards are such an important route to support and publicity for writers outside the London bubble. While living in Newcastle I learned about the excellent reputational springboard the awards provide and how their existence foregrounds the need for funding to enable working-class and other under-represented voices to emerge. I am thrilled to be asked to be one of the judges of the Sid Chaplin Award, a rarity in that all forms of writing, including non-fiction and young adult, is welcomed. I can’t wait to read the entries.”

Helen Mort said: "As a previous winner, I know just how transformative the Northern Writers’ Awards are for authors across our region. I am so excited to be involved as a judge and to see other poets being given this opportunity. The North is home to so much literary talent and I cannot wait to read this year's entries."
